What is Autism

Autism is a neuro-developmental disorder that impairs an individual's ability to communicate, form meaningful relationships along with potentially having secondary diagnoses of anxiety disorder, learning disorders, seizure disorders, sensory integration disorder, and gastro-intestinal problems. Autism is the fastest growing developmental disorder in the nation. More children will be diagnosed with autism spectrum disorder this year than with AIDS, Diabetes, and Cancer combined. Autism affects 1 in every 150 children with a new case diagnosed every 20 minutes. Autism affects four times as many boys than girls but autism is not linked to race or socio-economic factors. Early intervention is critical to successful treatment of autism. Autism receives <5% of research funding even when comparing less prevalent childhood diseases.
